

Stronger is...

Stephanie thought remembering complicated passwords was an unnecessary nuisance. So she created a password by combining her cat's name with her dog's name and thought she was being clever. But when a disgruntled employee guessed Stephanie's password and sent embarrassing email from her account, Stephanie realized "fluffybandit" wasn't so clever after all.

Now Stephanie makes it a point not to use her pets' names, or any words found in the dictionary, as her password. She also includes at least one "special" character. Find out what other steps Stephanie takes to make her passwords strong and keep them secure at:
