Access employment verification through Experian Verify [1]

March 3, 2025 by Employee Services [2]

Employees applying for a loan, government program, housing or other services may need to provide verification of employment and salary through the University of Colorado. Starting today, CU employees can provide proof of their employment and income with Experian Verify.

CU's previous verification tool, CCC Verify, has merged into Experian Verify, meaning employees and employers will access the verification portal at experianverify.com [3].

Experian Verify allows employees to:

- Grant requesting organizations secure access to their employment verification and salary information.
- Access their own employment report to review for accuracy and/or share it with requesting organizations.
- Provide current employment and salary information.

Using Experian Verify

Employees are not required to establish an account for outside organizations to verify their CU employment information through Experian Verify, but they will need to create an account to view their own reports, access work history and verification letters. Those who already have an account with CCC Verify will need to create a new one with Experian Verify.

There will be no disruption to services during the transition. CCC Verify will remain available for employees, verifiers and HR offices to access reports for a short time during this transition period, but will no longer be available after April 3.

To get started, visit the Employment Verification information page [4].

Many companies use Experian Verify. Those that don't can visit the Employment Verification information page [4] for instructions to create an account.

The Experian Verify FAQ page [5] offers information for verifiers, employers and employees. If users have questions or experience problems not covered on the Experian website, they can contact customer support at verify.support@experian.com [6].
