New CU 403(b) ROTH option provides after-tax option for retirement savings [1]

December 5, 2019 by Employee Services [2]

The University of Colorado 403(b) Voluntary Retirement Plan is expanding to include a ROTH option, which allows employees to make after-tax contributions to their retirement savings. Employees can enroll in this option starting Dec. 11, with contributions beginning Jan. 1.

With CU’s new ROTH option, after-tax contributions have the potential to accumulate tax-free and withdrawals after age 59½ are tax-free, as long as you’ve met a five-year holding period. Plus, providing the ROTH option in a qualified retirement plan allows for higher contribution limits than a ROTH IRA.

“This has been an exciting project. The addition of ROTH offers another option for employees to supplement their income during retirement. Especially exciting, is being able to deliver something that the faculty and staff have been asking for,” said Michelle Martinez, Director of Strategic Benefits Initiatives.

Compare plans

What exactly is the difference between a ROTH option, a ROTH IRA and a traditional IRA? The terms are similar enough to cause confusion. See the chart below to see how the features of the CU 403(b) ROTH option compare to these other plans.

The ROTH option might be right for you if:
You expect a higher tax rate in the future
You are not eligible to make ROTH IRA contributions due to high income
You want to make contributions larger than the ROTH IRA limit
You feel confident that your retirement income needs are met and want to leave a potential tax-free inheritance
You want to help protect retirement assets from possible tax penalties

For more in-depth information, you may want to consult your tax advisor or book an appointment with a TIAA financial consultant on campus [7].
