What will financial literacy look like in the future? Attend TIAA's upcoming webinar to find out [1]

April 10, 2019 by Employee Services [2]

At times, the financial world can feel confusing. If you have ever felt lost, you are not alone. From 10 - 11 a.m. (MST) April 25, TIAA is hosting the “Millennial Financial Literacy and Fintech Use” webinar as part of their ongoing series to help millennials become more comfortable with financial topics.

Why millennials specifically? The TIAA Institute and the Global Financial Literacy Excellence Center (GFLEC) released a recent report identifying a large financial literacy gap amongst this generation. This webinar will provide further insight into these results and the future of finance and technology as we know it from lead TIAA Institute researchers.

Upcoming webinars

TIAA is hosting additional webinars throughout May and June to help improve financial know-how at all stages of life. They tackle a wide range of specialized topics from making finishing touches to your finances as a working woman to managing income and debt together.

As a CU employee, you don’t have to pay out-of-pocket fees to attend. Just sign into your TIAA account to start learning.

Take a look at upcoming webinars here [3] or visit TIAA.org/webinars.
