Personal Financial Consultations [1]

Consultations now via phone and online

TIAA is taking steps to ensure the safety of CU employees and their associates. In light of the impacts of the coronavirus, TIAA will be converting their in-person counseling sessions to either phone or virtual counseling through April 13 and possibly further. Their Financial Consultants remain committed to you during these unprecedented times. If you have questions and concerns about the state of your retirement plan, you are encouraged to schedule a counseling session through their online registration site [2].

If you’ve avoided seeking financial guidance because of the expense, you’re not alone. But what if you could get personalized financial guidance without any additional cost to you?

Through your employment at CU, you’re entitled to one-on-one sessions with financial professionals from TIAA, the university’s retirement plan service provider. While the focus of these meetings is your questions related to retirement planning, they also provide an opportunity to discuss other financial issues or concerns on your mind.

Consultants don’t work on commission and won’t push products or personal agendas; they’ll work to understand your unique situation and goals and provide education and guidance tailored to your needs.

Schedule an in-person session

For your convenience, TIAA financial consultants are on each CU campus regularly. Employees also may schedule a session at TIAA’s Denver, Boulder and Fort Collins offices. A friend or family member is welcome to attend with you.

To schedule a session:

- Check the Employee Services events calendar [3] to see when consultants will be on your campus.
- Call 1-800-732-8353 or visit www.tiaa.org/schedulenow [4].

Note: These services are included in the administrative contracts CU has with TIAA.
